

The repetition of identical or similar vowel sounds _____
 Example? _____

The repetition of final consonant sounds following different vowel sounds in nearby words _____
 Example? _____

*A figure of speech that uses deliberate exaggeration _____
 Example? _____

The repetition of consonant sounds at the beginning of words _____
 Example? _____

The voice which speaks in a poem (often independent of the poem's author) _____

A poem, usually of fourteen lines, in regulated meter and rhyme scheme, usually presenting and solving a problem (divided into either 8:6 or 4:4:4:2 lines) _____

*The above poem, in 8:6 line division _____

*The above poem, in 4:4:4:2 line division _____

*What the last two rhyming lines in the poem above are called _____

When words have the same or a similar sound within or at the end of a line of poetry _____

The rhythm of a poem _____

How that rhythm is divided _____

A pause in the middle or flow of a line of verse _____

Example? _____

Reading a poem in terms of its rhythm _____

*A line of poetry in which a grammatical pause (punctuation) and the physical end of the line coincide

*Where one line of poetry ends and the next line begins (shown horizontally as a /) _____

When the thought of one line of verse carries into the next line without punctuation _____

Example? _____

*Poetry without regular rhythm or rhyme _____

Example? _____

Bonus: Repetition of an identical word or group of words in successive verses or clauses _____

Review definitions of unfamiliar vocabulary from any of poetry we've read.